Dear Collectors

This edition presents a variety of stamp issues, including one to celebrate Stamp Collecting Month in October. The stamp issue brings to light some Australian species you may want to avoid in Things that Sting. The six stamps feature creatures that can certainly pack a powerful (and painful) punch.

Open Gardens Australia, a se-tenant set of five stamps, presents the beauty of nature in a formal setting. The Open Gardens Australia program is a huge success and offers the public access to some of the most outstanding private gardens in the country at set times during the year. Those with an interest in the designs, ideas and creativity of garden and landscape designers, or have visited the gardens featured, will appreciate this stamp issue.

The Era of the Husky reflects on a time when survival in the harsh environment of Antarctica could depend on the help and stamina of a dog breed. Primarily used to haul supplies, these powerful, intelligent animals also brought companionship and loyalty to expedition party members.

In this year of events associated with World War I we recognise Australia's first victory at sea, and a naval encounter that gained much respect for the Australian servicemen who risked their lives. The Sydney/Emden engagement occurred in the waters of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, after an attempt by the SS Emden to attack a communications station on Direction Island. The battle was brief, with losses on both sides.

A Century of Service: the Australian Defence Force will be released prior to Remembrance Day and marks the contribution of Australian military personnel over the last 100 years.

The stamp designs show diverse garden types in differing climates and geography.

Open Gardens Australia began life as Victoria's Gardens Scheme in 1987, broadening to become a national program in 2000. The gardens are not of a particular type, but represent rural and urban, large and small, and an enormous range of garden type in differing climates and environments across Australia.

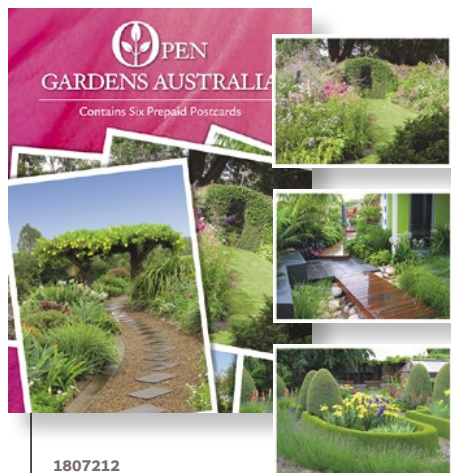

Cruden Farm is an eight-hectare property established by the late Dame Elisabeth Murdoch more than 80 years ago. She engaged, among others, renowned landscape designer Edna Walling. It is a founding garden in the Open Gardens program.

Award-winning landscape designer Janine Mendel developed the 450-square-metre Mendel Garden. Reflecting her philosophy that the house must appear to take root in the land, the garden fosters a permeable boundary with the built form.

Steve Hailstone began developing Niwajiri in the Adelaide Hills in the late 1980s. Displaying European, Japanese and Australian influences, Niwajiri has been meticulously planned and planted to reflect the values of its owner-designer.

Walcott Garden was first developed in 1926 and was redesigned in 2003. This water-wise garden reflects the vision of its owners and focuses on natives sourced from all over Australia, with some plant species from New Zealand.

Wychwood is a cold-climate garden of tranquility and beauty, set among the rolling hills near Mole Creek, Tasmania. Its focal point is a seven-ring classical labyrinth, created through careful grass mowing, with a stone column situated at its centre.

The stamps are presented as se-tenant pairs. The portrait stamps show dogs at rest; the landscape designs show huskies working in teams in the Australian Antarctic Territory.

The term husky commonly refers to snow or northern hemisphere dogs, and can include a wide range of breeds, such as the Siberian Husky, Alaskan Malamute, Samoyed and many more. The thick, double-layered coats of these dogs protect them against extreme conditions. These powerful dogs can haul between 50 and 90 kilograms, and the number of dogs in a team is determined by the weight of the load to be hauled.

Huskies were first used in Antarctica by the British Antarctic Expedition in 1898–1900. Little more than a decade later, Douglas Mawson used huskies during his 1911–14 Australasian Antarctic Expedition. In 1954, when Australia established its first permanent Antarctic station at Mawson, huskies were introduced to the Australian territory. These dogs had been bred from Greenland and Labrador huskies that had been left temporarily at Melbourne Zoo in 1948 by a French expedition unable to reach Antarctica due to extreme pack ice. It was agreed that any dogs bred from those left at the zoo would become Australian property, and so these became the first of the Australian Antarctic huskies.

The 1991 Protocol on Environmental Protection to the Antarctic Treaty banned all introduced species, except humans, from Antarctica. In 1993, the last remaining huskies left the Australian Antarctic Territory. The older dogs lived out their days in Australia; the younger dogs went to a new life in Minnesota, USA.

Stamp Collecting Month 2014

Things that Sting

Australia has numerous insects and animals that sting or bite as a form of defence. Some are extremely dangerous and can be fatal for humans, while others, despite their painful stings, rarely inflict serious damage. We should respect our varied wildlife, learn to identify those creatures that are potentially dangerous, and take sensible precautions to avoid being stung or bitten. This stamp issue features insects, reptiles and fish that can pack a painful punch if disturbed or threatened.

About the size of a honey bee, the European Wasp (Vespula germanica) is an introduced species to Australia where it is considered a pest. It probably arrived by hitching rides on boats and planes. There have been no human deaths recorded in Australia as a result of being stung by the European Wasp.

Bull ants (genus Myrmecia) are alert ants that can grow up to 40mm and have characteristic large eyes, long slender mandibles and a potent venom-loaded sting. There are about 90 species of bull ant in Australia. They collect plant nectar, other juices as well as animal prey.

The Tiger Snake (genus Notechis) is found in two broad areas: south-eastern Australia (including the islands of Bass Strait and Tasmania), and south-western Australia. The snake's toxic venom make it extremely dangerous to humans and so any contact should be avoided. Anyone bitten by a tiger snake should seek medical attention immediately.

The Lionfish (Common Lionfish Pterois volitans) is found throughout the world's tropical and temperate oceans. In Australia the Common Lionfish is known from south-western Western Australia, around the tropical north of the country and south to the southern coast of New South Wales. Small groups will often hunt cooperatively.

The Stonefish (Reef Stonefish Synanceia verrucosa) is distributed throughout tropical, marine waters of the Indo-Pacific and in Australia it is recorded from the Great Barrier Reef to northern New South Wales. It eats fishes and crustaceans, usually waiting for prey to swim past, then striking with incredible speed.

The Stingray (Bluespotted Fantail Ray Taeniura lymna) is found worldwide in marine, brackish and fresh-water habitats. There are about 80 species in this large family (Dasyatidae). In most species the tail is long and thin, and usually armed with one or two very sharp, barbed, venomous spines.

This stamp issue recognises four of Australia's metropolitan racecourses, on which the lion's share of Australia's Group 1 races are run.

Eagle Farm is Queensland's foremost racing venue and home to the Brisbane Racing Club. It was established in the Brisbane suburb of Ascot in 1863 and has hosted race meetings ever since. Its main racing event is the Brisbane Racing Carnival, held each May–June.

Royal Randwick, home of the Australian Turf Club, is Australia's oldest major racecourse, established as Sandy Course in 1833. It moved to Homebush in 1838, before returning to Randwick in 1860. Its recent redevelopments include a new six-level grandstand and the "Theatre of the Horse", an outdoor amphitheatre.

Located in Adelaide, Morphettville is home to the South Australian Jockey Club and is the hub of the state's horseracing. The first races were run at Morphettville in 1875, and today it hosts around 60 race days annually, of which Adelaide Cup Day is the feature event.

Flemington is the oldest continuing metropolitan racecourse in the country, with races run every year since 1840. The centrepiece of its spring racing carnival is the Melbourne Cup, Australia's premier race, which was first run here in 1861. Flemington is also home to the Victoria Racing Club, which celebrates its 150th anniversary in 2014.

HMAS Sydney of the

SMS Emden of the Imperial German Navy

Australia's first victory at sea during World War I was also the first engagement by a warship of the fledgling Royal Australian Navy. The Battle of Cocos took place on 9 November 1914 when the Australian light cruiser HMAS Sydney responded to an attack by the German light cruiser SMS Emden on a communications station at Direction Island in the Cocos (Keeling) Islands.

Australia, sending wool, wheat and gold across the Indian Ocean to sustain the Mother Country, and dispatching tens of thousands of young men to join the fight, had a vital interest in bringing Emden to her end.

The battle, when it came, was short and bloody; an emphatic first victory at sea for the newborn Royal Australian Navy.

While Emden was the first to fire, Sydney's more powerful guns resulted in Emden's eventual surrender after she was deliberately beached on the North Keeling Island reef. There were fatalities on both sides, including 134 crew from Emden and four from Sydney.

In 1914 Australia's only military aviation base, the Central Flying School at Point Cook, was equipped with two flying instructors and five training aircraft.

This year we commemorate the centenary of the beginning of WWI. This stamp issue remembers the contribution made by our defence services over the last century. Australia has maintained military forces since shortly after Federation, when the Australian Army and Commonwealth Naval Force were established by the amalgamation of the forces maintained by the states. The Australian Imperial Force (AIF) was formed on 15 August 1914, in response to Britain declaring war on Germany, because existing militia forces were unable to serve overseas. The Australian Defence Force comprises the Royal Australian Navy (RAN), the Royal Australian Air Force (RAAF) and the Australian Army. Together these are known as the Tri-services. The three services operated more or less independently until an integrated command structure was established with the formation of the Australian Defence Force on 9 February 1976.

"Tom is arriving Birdsville"

The words heard over radio sets announcing the arrival of a legendary postie. Esmond Gerald (Tom) Kruse was responsible for mail deliveries along the 1,040-kilometre Birdsville Track mail run. This postcard recognises his service to outback communities, often under very trying conditions.
