Hello Collectors

Welcome to a new edition of the Stamp Bulletin, presenting upcoming Australian stamp issues and themed collectables. There's been some excitement around the launch of the exclusive Australia Post version of the Monopoly board game. If the game is not available through a particular Post Office, orders can be placed at our online shop and via mail order.

In May, Australia's rich national heritage is on show, through commemorative stamp designs that present three historic sites from the National Heritage List. The Sydney Harbour Bridge, a significant feat of engineering, is recognised around the world. The Queen Victoria Market, the largest open-air market in Australia, welcomes visitors through its grand Victorian-era entrance. Canberra's Old Parliament House, where federal parliament sat between 1927 and 1988, is now home to the Museum of Australian Democracy.

Stamp issues showcasing the natural world are also included in this edition, the first two in May. We present three of Australia's 37 migratory shorebird species, which travel from the northern hemisphere to rich feeding grounds in the south. We showcase Norfolk Island's magnificent Reef Manta Ray, which can reach up to five metres in width. And in June, we release an illustrative set of stamps that present four of the more than 20 species of pigeons and doves native to Australia, with artwork by William T Cooper AO. Also featured is an issue on two of Norfolk Island's endemic land snail species.

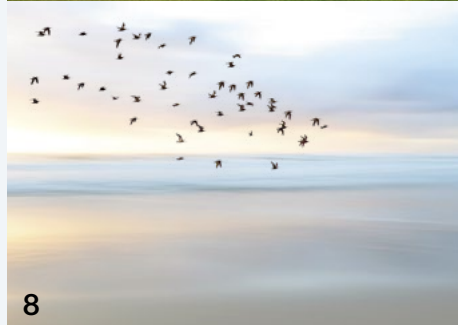

From 10 May, The Great Aussie Coin Hunt is back. There's a new set of 26 coins, featuring Australian icons beginning with each letter of the alphabet. As well as hunting for coins in your change at participating Post Offices, individual coins and various collectables can be purchased by mail order, online and via participating Post Offices. For the really keen coin hunter, there's a very special limited-edition coin design, which will be randomly placed within tubes of coins available for purchase.

The Australian National Heritage List was established in 2003 to recognise natural and historic places of outstanding heritage significance to the nation and currently comprises 120 places, of which three historic places are represented in this stamp issue.

The Sydney Harbour Bridge is recognised around the world as one of Australia's iconic landmarks. Construction of the bridge commenced in 1924 and the official opening took place on 19 March 1932. One of the largest single-arch steel bridges in the world, in 2007 the Sydney Harbour Bridge was inscribed on the National Heritage List as an important economic and industrial feat in Australia's history, a pivotal step in the development of modern Sydney, and a symbol of the aspirations of the nation.

Queen Victoria Market occupies seven hectares in the heart of the city of Melbourne. Constructed in stages from the 1860s and officially opened on 20 March 1878, the market is the largest open-air market in Australia and the most intact of Melbourne's Victorian-era markets. The site is also significant as Melbourne's first cemetery from 1837 to 1854. In 2018 the Queen Victoria Market was added to the National Heritage List because of its links to the early colonial population of Melbourne and its ability to demonstrate the principal characteristics of a 19th-century metropolitan produce market.

Old Parliament House in Canberra was the seat of the Parliament of Australia from 1927 to 1988. During this time, its chambers and corridors witnessed many of the events that shaped our modern nation, from declarations of war to constitutional and social reform, including progress that enabled Aboriginal voting and recognition of land rights. Old Parliament House, which now houses the Museum of Australian Democracy, was inscribed on the National Heritage List in 2006 and stands as the symbol of the nation's political heritage, where the foundations of Australia's journey to becoming one of the world's most vibrant and multicultural democratic nations were laid.

Australia has 37 species of migratory shorebirds, seven of which are at risk. A great part of the problem is human impact on the intertidal zone, particularly along sections of the migratory route between the Arctic Circle and Australasia; in China and South Korea, the construction of seawalls, land reclamation, infrastructure development and pollution are devastating food sources and roosting sites.

Australia's migrating shorebirds breed in the northern hemisphere and then travel to rich feeding grounds in the south for the non-breeding season. Listed as vulnerable, the Bar-tailed Godwit breeds in Alaska, Scandinavia and north Asia, and in Australia is most numerous on the northern coast, though evident elsewhere. The critically endangered Great Knot breeds in eastern Siberia, and in Australia is most common across the north but can be found around the continent. Australia's largest shorebird, the Eastern Curlew is listed as critically endangered. Breeding in Russia and north-eastern China, it is widely distributed along coastal areas in Australia but most numerous in the north-east and south, including Tasmania.

The waters around the Cocos (Keeling) Islands are frequented by a range of marine life, including the Reef Manta Ray Mobula alfredi. Found in tropical and sub-tropical parts of the Indo-Pacific, this spectacular ray reaches up to five metres in width, has triangular pectoral fins, horn-shaped cephalic fins and a large, forward-facing mouth. The colour of the dorsal side is dark grey or black with white areas near the top of the head, and the ventral surface is generally white, with dark spots and blotches.

Unique belly markings identify individual rays. The ray is generally seen in reefs close to shore but may venture out to depth to feed on zooplankton, the tiny, microscopic animals found in the water column. The Reef Manta Ray is classified as vulnerable on the IUCN Red List of Threatened Species.

Approximately 340 species of pigeons and doves (family Columbidae, order Columbiformes) are distributed almost worldwide, with strongest representation in tropical and subtropical regions. In Australia they occur in most habitats, from the dense rainforests of north Queensland to the windswept heathlands of Tasmania. This issue depicts just four of the more than 20 species of pigeons and doves native to Australia.

Images are reproduced with permission from Pigeons and Doves in Australia by Joseph M

Forshaw AM, illustrations by William T Cooper AO. Published by CSIRO Publishing (2015).

The large, arboreal Topknot Pigeon (Lopholaimus antarcticus), so named for its distinctive crest, is recovering from past excessive hunting and is again becoming common in coastal and subcoastal forests of eastern Australia, where its range expands south into eastern Victoria. The diet of this pigeon consists almost entirely of fruit, which varies throughout its range as fruit ripen at different times during the year.

Despite its brilliant plumage colouration, the arboreal Superb Fruit-dove (Ptilinopus superbus) remains well hidden amidst foliage, so is more often heard than seen in the rainforests of eastern Queensland and north-eastern New South Wales. This fruit-dove feeds primarily on fruits and berries.

The White-headed Pigeon (Columba leucomela) is becoming increasingly common in the same forests as the Topknot Pigeon. It is colonising open woodlands, farmlands and urban gardens. The White-headed Pigeon feeds on rain-forest fruit and seeds and has a special taste for the introduced Camphor Laurel.

Favouring drier inland woodlands and grasslands of north-eastern Australia, the ground-dwelling Squatter Pigeon (Geophaps scripta) has disappeared from northern New South Wales and much of southern Queensland because of habitat loss and predation by cats and foxes. This pigeon feeds almost exclusively on seeds from grasses, herbs and shrubs, commonly foraging along the sides of roads.

Norfolk Island has a high diversity of land snails relative to other similar-sized islands, and this stamp issue presents two endemic species. Greenwoodoconcha nux is found in mixed leaf forest at Rocky Point Reserve and Norfolk Island National Park, where it lives in leaf litter, under fallen palm leaves and under bark on logs. The Assimineid Duritropis albocarinata (also known as Omphalotropis albocarinata and Omphalotropis brenchleyi) is found at Mount Bates, Mount Pitt, Rocky Point Reserve, Cemetery Bay and Duncombe Bay, where it grazes on logs, endemic plants and wet leaf litter within rainforests and woodlands.
