Hello Collectors

Welcome to the third edition of the Stamp Bulletin for 2022, presenting new stamp issues for Australia and the Australian Territories. We also feature collectables that celebrate the Australian Legends of Filmmaking, announced on 15 March.

In May, we present two stamp issues that relate to the longest living culture on Earth. Aboriginal Fibre Art showcases artworks created by the Yolngu women of the Gapuwiyak community in north-east Arnhem Land, who create woven objects that are not only beautiful and culturally significant but also practical.

Native plants have played an important role in the traditional diet, medicines and cultural ceremonies of Aboriginal peoples. The Bush Seasonings stamp issue presents illustrations of three seasonings, with collectables including a recipe collection.

Also in May, we'll release an issue of two stamps featuring historical jukongs of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands. These traditional wooden sailboats, designed for local conditions, were used for work, fishing, transportation and social racing.

In June, we release Megapodes of Australia. Literally meaning "large foot", these remarkable birds have habitats throughout mainland Australia, where they construct their large breeding mounds.

We also celebrate the survival of the Norfolk Island Morepork – a small owl and one of the world's rarest, brought back from the brink thanks to ongoing conservation efforts.

On 14 June, we will commemorate the life of His Royal Highness Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh, with a stamp featuring the official royal portrait painted by Australian-born and London-based artist Ralph Heimans.

From 9 May, the Great Aussie Coin Hunt is back with a brand-new set of 26 coins. This third hunt includes a special limited-edition coloured coin, which will be randomly placed within tubes of coins available for purchase from participating Post Offices, mail order and online. Collectors also have the chance to enter a daily draw to win $1,000 – see page 10 for more details.

The Australia Post Australian Legends Award is presented annually to honour a living individual or group of individuals who have excelled in a particular field of endeavour and who have shaped Australian society or culture for the better. The five acclaimed, award-winning directors named as Australian Legends of Filmmaking have entertained and moved audiences with their cinematic creations, raising the profile of the Australian film industry and enriching the cultural life of the nation.

My Brilliant Career (1979), directed by Gillian Armstrong AM (b. 1950), was the first Australian feature film to be directed by a woman for 46 years. Its significant success was a launching pad for Armstrong's impressive and award-winning body of work, comprising 20 films over a 40-plus-year career. Baz Luhrmann (b. 1962) burst onto the filmmaking scene with his Red Curtain trilogy: Strictly Ballroom (1992), Romeo + Juliet (1996) and Moulin Rouge! (2001). Luhrmann's films are known for their energy and visual richness and have earned a slew of national and international awards. George Miller AO (b. 1945) is an icon of the film industry, with a career that so far spans 50 years. Miller's Mad Max films are hailed as some of the greatest action movies of all time, and he won an Academy Award for best animated feature film for Happy Feet (2006). Warwick Thornton (b. 1970) is a Kaytetye man from Alice Springs whose powerful films, such as Samson & Delilah (2009), highlight Indigenous issues, perspectives and experiences. Peter Weir AM (b. 1944) made his presence known with pivotal Australian films such as Picnic at Hanging Rock (1975) and Gallipoli (1981), before going on to create works such as Dead Poet's Society (1989), The Truman Show (1998) and Master and Commander (2003), which cemented his reputation as the consummate storyteller.

This issue features contemporary fibre art by Yolŋu women of the small inland community of Gapuwiyak in north-east Arnhem Land, Northern Territory. The artists working from Gapuwiyak Culture and Arts have long had a reputation for producing a range of exceptional fibre and other artworks. Baskets and containers, called bathi, are made by skilfully twining, looping or coiling plant fibres such as pandanus (gunga), which have been coloured with natural bush dyes. For the Yolŋu people, these objects have profound cultural, ceremonial and symbolic significance in addition to being useful and aesthetically pleasing. Represented on the stamps is a coiled bathi for a baby by Lucy Malirrimurruwuy Wanapuyngu (b. 1955); a twined conical bathi by Mary Djupuduwuy Guyula (1945–2005) and a coiled, flat-bottomed bathi by Nancy Walinyinawuy Guyula (1940–2017). Fibre art by members of the community is available commercially from the Gapuwiyak Culture and Arts centre.

Influenced by Malay and Scottish watercraft, the traditional wooden sailboat of Cocos (Keeling) Islands was well adapted to the needs and conditions of the atoll environment. The jukung (or dukong) was broad-bottomed, with a shallow draught and almost vertical sides. As well as being used for work, fishing and transportation, jukongs were used for social racing. This included between Home Islanders and the telegraph staff based at the cable station on Direction Island. Eric E Story was an Eastern Extension Telegraph Company engineer posted to the cable station between 1922 and 1941, and the photographs in this issue are among those he and his colleagues took during their time at Cocos (Keeling) Islands.

The traditional diet of ancient Aboriginal peoples has included at least 50 per cent plant foods, with specific species depending on the features of the region. Many native plants have also played an important role as medicines, as fibre and construction materials and in cultural ceremonies. Various tools and utensils have been used to gather plants, including rounded wooden or softened-bark vessels, such as the coolamon, or to process dried leaves, such as a grinding stone.

Popular bush seasonings include Mountain Pepper (Tasmannia lanceolata), a medium-sized shrub or small tree, the fruit of which is called pepperberry; River Mint (Mentha australis), a small perennial herb comprising scented leaves (with a flavour similar to spearmint) and small white or lilac flowers; and Lemon Myrtle (Backhousia citriodora), a shrub or medium-sized tree with leaves that have a strong and refreshing citrus flavour.

This issue features all three Australian megapodes (literally "large foot"). These remarkable birds don't incubate their eggs with body heat. Instead, they use their powerful legs to build large mounds by scraping together soil, sand and vegetation debris, into which the eggs are laid. Incubation occurs through solar radiation and the heat generated by decaying vegetation. On hatching, the fully feathered chicks require no parental care and can fly short distances within a few hours.

The Malleefowl (Leipoa ocellata) has a fragmented range in semi-arid regions of southern mainland Australia from New South Wales and western Victoria to southern Western Australia. It is about the size of a large domestic chicken, and the grey, cream, black and rufous plumage provides good camouflage within its habitat of mallee and wattle scrubland and woodland. The male constructs the mound, which is around a metre in height and five metres in diameter and the female lays an average of 15 eggs.

The Australian Brush-turkey (Alectura lathami) is found in eastern Australia from Far North Queensland to the South Coast of New South Wales and has been introduced to Kangaroo Island, South Australia. The largest of the Australian megapodes, it has a fan-like tail, dark plumage, bare red head and a yellow or purple wattle. The mound, built by the male, is up to 1.5 metres high and up to four metres across. Up to 50 eggs laid by several females can be found in a single mound.

Smallest of the Australian megapodes, the Orange-footed Scrubfowl (Megapodius reinwardt) is found in coastal regions of northern Australia, frequenting rainforest, mangroves and monsoon forest. This bird has a head crest, grey-brown plumage, orange legs and feet and an orange-yellow beak. Both sexes build the huge mound, which can reach 4.5 metres in height and 15 metres in diameter, and which sometimes accommodates more than one breeding pair, producing large numbers of hatchlings each season.

This stamp commemorates the life and service of His Royal Highness Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh, who passed away peacefully on 9 April 2021. Born Philip, Prince of Greece and Denmark, he renounced his titles and became a British subject in order to marry HRH Princess Elizabeth. He assumed royal duties following Elizabeth's ascension to the throne on 6 February 1952, and during more than 60 years of official public life he attended an average of 350 official engagements a year until retiring from royal duties on 2 August 2017.

The portrait shown in the stamp and minisheet was commissioned from Australian-born, London-based artist Ralph Heimans to mark Prince Philip's retirement. Prince Philip poses in the Grand Corridor at Windsor Castle, where he appears very relaxed, despite being formally dressed in evening attire and wearing the sash of the Order of the Elephant.

The Norfolk Island Morepork (Ninox novaeseelandiae undulata) is a small, brown-mottled owl, considered a distinctive subspecies of the New Zealand Morepork (N. novaeseelandiae). It is one of the world's rarest owls, and the subject of conservation efforts. Only one individual (a female) remained on Norfolk Island by 1987, when two male New Zealand Moreporks were introduced. By 1999, the population had reached around 45–50. After the initial increase in numbers, there had been no evidence of successful breeding since 2011 until two chicks fledged in 2019. There are currently only 25–35 individuals, so the Norfolk Island Morepork remains at great risk of extinction. Conservation interventions include installing rat-proof nesting boxes, culling nest competitors, baiting rats and improving the owl's natural habitat.
